

Suggested Interview Questions

from the WaterBrook Multnomah Publishing Group a division of Random House Inc.

Tricia Goyer

Author of

Blue Like Play Dough

1. Tricia, your new book, Blue Like Play Dough, has kind of a funny name. What do you mean by it?
2. Tell us all a little bit about the book and why you decided it was time to write it.
3. In Blue Like Play Dough you share a lot of your struggles, including getting pregnant as a teenager. What do you hope this transparency will mean for women who read the book?
4. How do your kids feel about you sharing so much of your past and present failures and triumphs in this book?
5. Let's go back to the analogy you use of being molded and shaped like play dough by God. What areas of your life have you seen Him shaping?
6. How does being a mom affect the way that God squishes and squeezes you?
7. You talk about discovering your children's uniqueness. We all know our kids are different, but how should this affect our parenting styles? Should the approach change for each child?
8. You've said that God led you to give and serve in areas outside the home. Explain what this service has taught you about the myth that the best moms are stay-at-home moms.
9. Blue Like Play Dough chronicles some of the people God brought into your life to serve—who were these people, and how did serving them change you?
10. You've committed to homeschooling your kids. What encouragement can you give to homeschooling moms?
11. What about moms that don't homeschool? Do you have encouragement for the shaping and molding happening in their lives?
12. Now that you've finished Blue Like Play Dough, do you feel like you've arrived? You're done writing it, so you must be in the right shape, right?
13. Where can our listeners learn more about you and Blue Like Play Dough?

For more information, please contact:
Liz Johnson, Publicist, Multnomah Books
(719) 268-1936, ejohnson@randomhouse.com